I'll be there: A ghost story. Ed Halliwell

David and Hélène are on their way to spend the weekend with old friends, renting rooms in an even older house, shared with the family who owns it, in the middle of France, in the middle of nowhere. David, a pensive writer trying to finish his first novel, is not in the mood for socialising – but he will have to try. It will be David, in his withdrawn state during their first evening, who notices before anyone else that all does not appear to be well: their hosts have a painful secret, and he gradually begins to see that something even more disturbing may lie behind it.

But David remains fiercely sceptical, despite experiences he can't explain. Will he be looking out when it really matters?

'I'll be there' brings mystery and tragedy to a comic, satirical narrative.
