A Men of Falcon Pointe Novel

Eighteen-year-old Nephi Rafe Norton goes to Falcon Pointe University to find himself. Away from his conservative family, he hopes to discover if his attraction to men is the real deal. Encouraged to be someone a little different, he starts using his middle name. Rafe quickly makes friends, some of whom use a paddle to dispense caring discipline, and he lives it up until midterms hit, and he realizes he's flunking statistics class.

When Scotland native Eigneachan Jackson Levlin offers to help, Rafe is eager to accept not only because Levlin is a psychologist, but also because he's out and proud and hot as hell.

As their relationship heats up, Rafe decides to spend one last Christmas with his family before he tells them. When his little sister outs him to his siblings, they turn out to be fully supportive, and he takes heart until he introduces Levlin to his father, who brutally dismisses both of them. Now Rafe must come to peace with his father's rejection or risk losing Levlin and all that he has become at Falcon Pointe forever. "
