It is 1944, and three very different girls meet at auditions to join ENSA—the Entertainments National Service Association. Catherine is a singer whose husband is missing in action. She desperately needs to earn money to support her mother and baby daughter. Della is a Liverpudlian show girl. She can dance and sing and is fiercely ambitious. She wants to become a star. Frances is from a titled but poverty-stricken family. She is determined to keep her family seat intact until her brother Hugh is released from POW camp. She joins the troupe to be the organizer's, Beau Bennett, assistant. The girls support each other through the dangers and triumphs that face them, as each find love in the most unexpected places.
