Relationships are but mere fragments in the overall schema of humanity and yet, bonds of varying strength are the crux of being human.

Emery Kidd's perfect, if not mundane, life changes when she once again encounters Serafina Strong. If her rival were not so provoking Emery might almost be grateful for the new adventure Sera proposes.

In the early part of the twenty-second century, the enforcement system Sera has worked for her entire life has been abolished. As a mediator of her community—a once-critical role in the system—she has suddenly lost her job and her purpose. Yet, instead of conceding defeat, she aspires to a new career as the heroine of the future and the human link to the past. She is uniquely qualified.

In her multi-regenerative lifetime, Sera had died twice. By multiple acts of fate, not only was she revived, she was also granted the gift of prescience. However, this is not a ghost story and Sera is not a clairvoyant in the traditional sense. With her most recent resurrection her sight became clearer and now she is able to see the impact of a change as it trickles its way along the timeline; the prospects are dim.

The objectives of the challenge Sera lays before Emery and her friends are divided at the onset by separate agendas. However, somehow, together, they need to veer the course of the future Sera has foreseen.
