“If you strike that dog again, I’ll kill you.”

—Jack London

A child’s scream shatters the silence of a serene campground. One man waits in the getaway vehicle, while a second man rushes with the terrified child struggling in his grip.

Enter twenty-six-year-old Evan Warner, the campground’s resident watchdog-with-thumbs. A large man lacking patience for troublemakers, Evan promptly foils the kidnapping with help from Frank Slade, his canine partner. To shocked bystanders it’s a happy ending. But for Evan it’s a bitter reminder.

The prior summer, two-year-old Lucy Kurtz vanished from the campground without a trace. In the year since, authorities have made zero progress on her case. Now, with his obsession for Lucy rekindled, Evan can no longer ignore the nagging question that haunts thoughtful men the world over:

What would Clint Eastwood do?

Following Lucy’s cold trail, Evan and Frank soon run into another problem. In a neighboring town with an understaffed police force, smalltime dogfighters have been stealing pets for their sick games, and Evan decides to put an abrupt end to their warped fun. As the clues lead him to the guilty parties, the gloves come off, and in the end only two questions remain:

Can skilled doctors piece the dogfighters back together again?

After so much time, is there truly any hope of finding Lucy Kurtz alive?
